

THE PRACTICAL LENS · A SCRIPT YOU CAN BORROW

The Consent Conversation.

A script you can borrow. Adapt the language to your practice and the tool you are using. The version below works for an AI note-taker in a one-to-one client meeting.

SAMPLE SCRIPT

“I use a tool that helps me capture our conversation, so I can give you my full attention. It records and transcribes the meeting. The recording stays on our side, only I and my team can see it, and you can ask me to switch it off any time. Are you comfortable using it today, or would you prefer I take notes by hand?”

Name the tool.

In plain words. What it does, where the data lives, who can see it. Three short sentences are enough. Skip the brand language and the vendor terms.

Offer a real choice.

Name the alternative out loud. Handwritten notes, no recording, whatever the fallback is. If the client picks the alternative, run the meeting that way. The choice has to be real for the consent to be real.

Record the answer.

A line in the CRM at minimum. A signed acknowledgment for first use. Refresh the conversation any time the tool changes or a new tool joins the workflow.
